

Helping Students Become Voters: 2018 Successes to 2020 Impact

www.campuselect.org

America's 20 million college students could determine our next president and key races at every level. But will they turn out and vote? Our Campus Election Engagement Project (CEEP) proudly played a part in doubling the student vote between 2014 and 2018, which would translate into a million more voters at our schools. With your help, here are the approaches we'll build on to make a major difference in 2020.

“I'm first in my family to go to college. As a CEEP Fellow, I became educated, aware, fully engaged, an influencer and a voter. Many people ask why I'm so engaged in voting issues as a STEM major. CEEP taught me how.”

— Axianax Merone, 2018-2019 CEEP Fellow,
Miami Dade College

CEEP addresses barriers to student voting from daunting laws to their sense their vote “doesn't matter.” We help campus administrators, faculty and student leaders leverage their resources and networks to get their students to vote. Our student Fellows complement this institutional impact with critical face-to-face reach, directly engaging their peers. In powerful and cost-effective ways, we help students register to vote, navigate the voting law maze, learn candidate stands, volunteer in campaigns and show up at the polls.

Building a culture of voting cycle by cycle, we generate both highly effective nonpartisan voter mobilization and long-term impact.

In 2018, CEEP:

- Worked in 22 states, involving students in key Senate, Governor's, Congressional and legislative races.
- Supported 259 student Fellows, who conducted over 1,800 election-related activities, from voter registration drives to parades to the polls.
- Created and distributed nonpartisan candidate guides for 46 major races, which Rock the Vote, Nonprofit Vote and Youth Service America also promoted.
- Helped student turnout increase to 40% in 2018 versus 2014's 19%. While we aren't the only group engaging our campuses, this means CEEP helped turn out roughly 1 million more student voters.

In 2020 CEEP will build on this momentum to engage 500 or more campuses enrolling 6 million students. Here's how.

2018 REACH AT A GLANCE

An additional 1,000 schools with a combined enrollment of 8.2 million received our resources either directly or from partners and allies like Campus Compact and its affiliates.

Our Core Approach: Engage the Resources of the Schools

Our CEEP state directors serve as catalysts, resource providers and trusted guides. Addressing both structural barriers to student voting and student cynicism, they help schools:

- Register student voters at first-year orientation and class registration.
- Navigate students through the ever-changing laws.
- Send all-campus emails and social media reminders with important election information.
- Distribute our nonpartisan candidate guides. CEEP researches key votes and what candidates tell different audiences, not just campaign statements. Schools and students trust our guides, saying they let them “see where candidates actually stand,” cutting past “all the lies and spin.”
- Build campus engagement coalitions like Ohio State’s OSU Votes, which CEEP helped launch, and which now gets continuing support from leadership programs and student government.

THE CEEP MULTIPLIER EFFECT

- Engage students to register voters in underrepresented off-campus communities, like the voter registration partnership between Virginia Commonwealth U and a nearby public housing project.
- Help campus newspapers make elections more salient.
- Engage unlikely campus stakeholders, from athletic teams to libraries.

CEEP Student Fellows: The Power of Peer-to-Peer Reach

CEEP’s student Fellows receive $500-$1,000 stipends to spearhead the personal peer outreach that’s critical for getting students to register and vote. Campuses that host them say they make a major difference, calling them “exceptional,” “magnificent,” and “incredibly helpful.”

In 2018 CEEP’s 259 Fellows:

- Conducted 1,800 voter participation activities on 136 campuses. Fellows registered 28,153 student voters, organized additional broader registration drives, had personal contact with over 150,000 student peers and reached 494,000 students by email and social media.
- Filled over 6,000 student volunteer slots to help with these activities. Together with faculty and staff, our Fellows distributed CEEP nonpartisan candidate guides, posters on voting rules, Your Vote Matters banners and 1.3 million voting rule wallet cards provided by our partner VoteRiders.

“ We could not have conducted this campaign without [CEEP Fellow] Mushtaq’s incredibly dedicated and competent work! He organized other students, alumni volunteers, department representatives, student organizations, etc. to co-sponsor and staff events, tables and classroom visits.”

— Jodi Bantley, Community Engagement Coordinator, Metropolitan State (St. Paul, MN)

“ When Miami Dade’s County Commissioners rejected Miami Dade College (MDC) for an early voting station, our MDC Fellows played a key role in organizing to reverse this and secure on-campus voting stations for our 165,000-student system. Our collaboration with CEEP is essential and indispensable.”

— Josh Young, MDC Civic Engagement Coordinator

Engaging Institutions—Inspiring Students

While our election-year Fellows engage peers on the ground, CEEP’s state directors and our off-year Fellows help college administrators, faculty and student leaders increase institutional electoral engagement efforts. They help schools continually expand their coalition of participating campus stakeholders and implement our most effective approaches.

“ We hosted CEEP Fellows and distributed CEEP candidate guides, including their large banners of their Ohio Governor’s guide. A CEEP grant let us give students free rides to the polls on Election Day and Early Voting days. We registered 740 students, engaged over 6,000, and saw a sixfold increase in voter turnout at our on-campus polling location.”

— Paul Valdez, Associate Director, Bowling Green State, Center for Community & Civic Engagement

From 2019 to 2020 and Beyond

In 8 years engaging campuses, CEEP has learned: If we keep schools involved, they keep building momentum. In 2019 we engaged students in Virginia legislative races & Kentucky & Louisiana’s governor’s races. Because only 48% of students voted in 2016, we focused on taking our campuses to a new level by strengthening their institutional commitments. To drive this, we pioneered our first off-year Fellows—91 at 78 schools—in states where students can make the maximum 2020 impact:

- We got Colorado, Iowa and Michigan’s Secretaries of State to sponsor campus voter engagement summits, held additional summits in North Carolina, Missouri and (upcoming) in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Michigan’s Secretary of State is promoting our idea to integrate voter registration materials into course syllabi.
- Temple U, Iowa State and U of Cincinnati have integrated voter registration into first-year orientation. U of Pittsburgh and some of the largest Florida schools are working on it.
- Our U of Central Florida fellow put together a social media plan adopted by their Student Government, which we’re using with other SGAs.
- Our Ohio State Fellow convinced their student government to advocate for a comprehensive plan, integrating voter registration with classroom registration and cancelling Election Day classes.

CEEP can’t claim sole credit for schools implementing the approaches we promote, or for their turnout increases. But our campus partners have been universally enthusiastic about our impact. In our post-election surveys completed by administrators, an overwhelming 97% praised our CEEP resources and our state directors’ resourcefulness and responsiveness.

Outreach these schools reported included:

- Sent all-campus emails to 1.9 million students (including students reached by CEEP Fellows), with most students receiving multiple messages. University of Wisconsin La Crosse’s Chancellor even played the bumbling fool in a funny voting video—now a national model.
- Connected to 4.8 million students, alumni and community members with election-related social media outreach. Our close-elections video reached 200,000 views.
- Distributed $78,000 in mini-grants to support efforts from printing candidate guides to shuttles to the polls.

- We also have commitments to distribute our candidate guides from Rock the Vote, Nonprofit Vote, Do Something, and Michelle Obama’s When We All Vote initiative.

In 2020, CEEP will support up to 28 staffers and 360 student Fellows. We’ll work in 22 or more key states, engaging 500 campuses that enroll over 6 million students.

We’d love to talk about how you can help make this possible.
