How, as a democracy, should the United States conduct our elections? Who decides access to the ballot box? Should large contributors have unlimited say? Who should draw congressional and legislative districts? How do we enforce ethical behavior in elected officials?

In 2021, the U.S. House has reintroduced H.R.1, For the People Act of 2021. The bill states that it seeks to “expand Americans’ access to the ballot box, reduce the influence of big money in politics, and strengthen ethics rules for public servants.” A huge bill, H.R.1 covers multiple aspects of elections and voting. The new bill follows a 2019 version that passed in the House 234 to 193 on a party-line vote. It had no Republican support, and then died in the Senate, where then-Majority Leader Mitch McConnell had deep criticisms and did not bring it up for a vote. As early 2021, the Senate is about to introduce its own version, S.1.

Why It’s Important

H.R.1 outlines key arguments in a discussion that will continue long after any particular bill, and the approaches it promotes will continue to be argued in debates around America’s electoral rules.

Because of wide Democratic Party support, H.R.1 serves as an outline of Democratic electoral reform policy. Meanwhile, Republican opposition highlights their core arguments around issues of electoral procedures and voting rules. A number of the bill’s provisions directly affect student voting and the role of colleges and universities in the electoral process.

This guide describes the bill’s key elements, explores arguments for and against it, and offers specific questions aimed at facilitating classroom or co-curricular discussions of its proposed policies.

Key Provisions

H.R.1 addresses a broad range of issues relevant to voting rights, campaign finance, and political oversight. Here are some key elements:

Voter Registration and Voting Access—Expands voter registration and voting access, including early voting and vote by mail, national automatic registration with opt-out provisions, and same-day registration. Limits the removal of eligible voters from voting rolls, and funds recruiting and training poll workers. Seeks restoration of the Voting Rights Act.

Youth Enfranchisement—Makes colleges and universities voter registration agencies, with a Campus Vote Coordinator and grant opportunities to “institutions demonstrating excellence in student voter registration.” Sets up a pilot program for providing voter registration information to high school students before graduation. Requires states to accept advance voter registration applications from individuals under 18 years of age. Provides grants to states to involve minors in election activities.
Campaign Finance Reform—Creates an alternative federal campaign funding system that matches small dollar contributions, paid for through fees assessed on organizations and corporations found liable for criminal and civil penalties. Modifies the powers of the Federal Election Commission, creates a pilot voucher program to support small donor funding, and seeks to curtail illicit funding through money-laundering shell companies.

Election Security—Includes provisions for improving cybersecurity and protecting electoral systems, including improved threat assessment. Sets nationwide requirements for voter-verified paper ballots, providing grants for states to obtain paper ballot voting systems for federal elections.

Nonpartisan Redistricting—Requires states to establish independent, nonpartisan redistricting commissions. Funds and sets standards for those commissions.

Ethics and Transparency—Establishes new ethics provisions for federal employees, the White House and Congress, a code of ethics for federal judges and justices, and expanded enforcement of regulations governing foreign agents. Requires candidates for President and Vice President to submit 10 years of tax returns. Passes the DISCLOSE Act, expanding transparency on political contributions, and the Honest Ads Act, increasing required disclosure for online political advertisements.

Additions Since 2019—The 2021 version of H.R.1 includes several new provisions that reflect voting problems from the 2020 election. These include sections that address drop boxes, curbside voting, and accommodations for voters residing in Indian lands. There are also new sections regulating foreign interference in U.S. elections.

Note: A number of states have implemented some of H.R.1’s reforms, including automatic voter registration, same day registration, and nonpartisan redistricting. In 2018 Nonprofit VOTE produced an overview of these reforms.

Arguments for H.R.1

- The League of Women Voters has endorsed the legislation, saying that it would make “our election system more free, fair, and accessible to all eligible Americans,” and highlighting its inclusion of same day and automatic registration, and small-donor matching funds.

- Pro-democracy organization Common Cause and 27 other organizations sent an open letter to members of the 166th Congress. Charging that “our current system allows powerful corporate and wealthy interests to regularly defy the foundational principles of fairness, equity, ethics, accountability, and respect for the rule of law,” Common Cause says that H.R.1 “would shine light on the out-of-control secret corporate influence in our democracy,” and would “end the dominance of big money in our politics.”

- Jeremy Bauer-Wolf, writing in Inside Higher Ed, suggests that H.R.1 would make it easier for college students to register to vote and to get to the polls. Bauer-Wolf writes that “some of the barriers students encounter in voting—confusion over registration deadlines, state voter identification laws” would end, and supports the bill’s Campus Vote Coordinator provision.

Arguments Against H.R.1

- House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy charged that in passing the 2019 version, House Democrats wanted “the government to interfere in our free and fair elections.” McCarthy wrote that H.R.1 “would weaken the security of our elections and make it harder to protect against voter fraud.”

- Former Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell wrote a Washington Post op-ed calling a version of H.R.1 the “Democrat Politician Protection Act,” and “a sprawling proposal to grow the federal government’s power over Americans’ political speech and elections.” McConnell charges that H.R.1 would “make it harder for states to fix inaccurate data in their voter rolls.” Regarding the bill’s regulations around disclosure of campaign-related disbursements by corporations and labor organizations, writes that it would be “giving Washington a clearer view of whom to intimidate and leaving citizens more vulnerable to public harassment over private views.”

- Adam Brandon, writing for FreedomWorks, a free-markets organization, called H.R.1 “Orwellian,” saying that it would “run roughshod over the freedom of speech and freedom of association protected by the First Amendment and privacy.” He charged that “by threatening to expose the identities of private citizens who participate in the political process,” H.R.1 “will discourage many American citizens from participating in the political process, and from dedicating their resources to it.”
• The American Civil Liberties Union, in a letter to the House Rules Committee, supported some provisions such as restoring the Voting Rights Act, expanding early voting, and redistricting reform, but wrote that there “are also provisions that unconstitutionally impinge on the free speech rights of American citizens and public interest organizations.” For example, it feared that the DISCLOSE Act “would chill the speech of issue and advocacy groups and non-profits such as the ACLU, Planned Parenthood, or the NRA that is essential to our public discourse and protected by the First Amendment.” (See this letter from Democracy 21 responding to the ACLU’s concerns.)

Possible Questions for Classroom Discussions or Forums

H.R.1 lends itself to group discussion in classrooms and other forums. It can be used for discussion in such areas as ethics and corruption, the appropriate scope and role of government action, equality of opportunity, and how we create fair elections given our increasing dependence on massive computer networks. Here are some sample questions:

- Does H.R.1 represent overreach, or is it appropriate to current problems around voter access and the safety of our electoral system?
- Do the disclosure provisions around political ads and political spending represent a threat to free speech, or a much-needed opening to identify who is influencing our democracy?
- Are the bill’s ethics provisions necessary? If so, why?
- Is the bill’s provision for matching funding on small contributions fair? If you were a candidate, would you agree to the limitations outlined in the program? Does it matter that the funds for the program do not come from American taxpayers?
- Are H.R.1’s improvements in access to elections, through ease of registration, early voting, and more accurate voter rolls, necessary?
- How have individual states fared in making some of the changes outlined in H.R.1?
- How big of a problem is cybersecurity in holding fair and accurate elections?
